Letter from the Principal

To the class of 2014,

As I sit down to write to you, I try to imagine when and where you might be reading this.

And I wonder, as you read this in the spring of 2014, what you will look back upon and remember? What about 50 years from now? Will you remember the activities and the classes? Individual conversations? That the Red Sox won the World Series in Fenway Park in the fall?

My guess is that you will remember the people in your life most of all. And, by the same token, we will remember you for the person that you are. You have impacted all of our lives here at South, in every nook and corner of our building. Indeed, it is you, our students, who truly are at the heart of our school. Whether it's in the performing arts, on the athletic field, in our classrooms, out in the community, or in one of the multitude of clubs and activities that comprise our school universe, you form the identity of Newton South High School. We are proud of your accomplishments, and more proud to call you our students.

So as you read this, whenever and wherever you are, I would like to congratulate you on a job well done, and to thank you for your contributions to Newton South High School!

With great respect,

Joel Stenbridge

Principal, Newton South High School

Indeed,
IT IS YOU,
our students,
WHO TRULY are the HEART
of our

In a school of 1,796 students, it's easy for voices to be lost in the barrage of sound. Immersed in opinions, protests, and impassioned debates, we often find ourselves with little time to appreciate the simplest forms of expression.

But what makes Newton South so special is our commitment to letting each and every student express themselves. Murals, posters, photos, ceramic bowls, and glass sculptures call out to us in the halls; in the classroom, open discussion is the standard. Dozens of clubs and teams clamor to share their achievements and recruit new voices.

Conversations flood the building, refusing to be tamed by even the strictest of librarians. When precious traditions threaten to come to an end, students respectfully protest, expertly wielding social as well as traditional media. And when voices are tragically silenced, we come together to remember and treasure the precious words they left behind.

In this year's Regulus, we set out to capture the diverse multitude of voices at South. We brought back senior quotes in honor of the theme and to emphasize the importance of every student's unique perspective. We hope that in ten, twenty, fifty years time, you will be able to look back at this book and remember the voices of 2014.

Sincerely,

Your Editors-In-Chief

Anna Alsop and Emily Goldstein

Time Out!

Free Blocks

Whether they spend them in the library, the lobby, or the dreaded 6167, South students love the much-needed pause that free blocks offer to a busy school day.

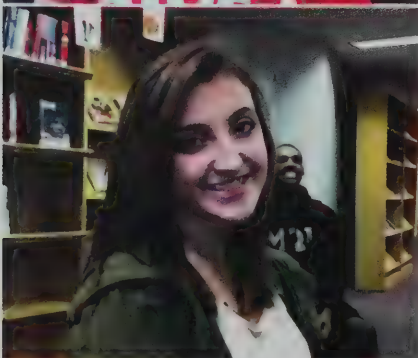

Which are the best blocks to have free?

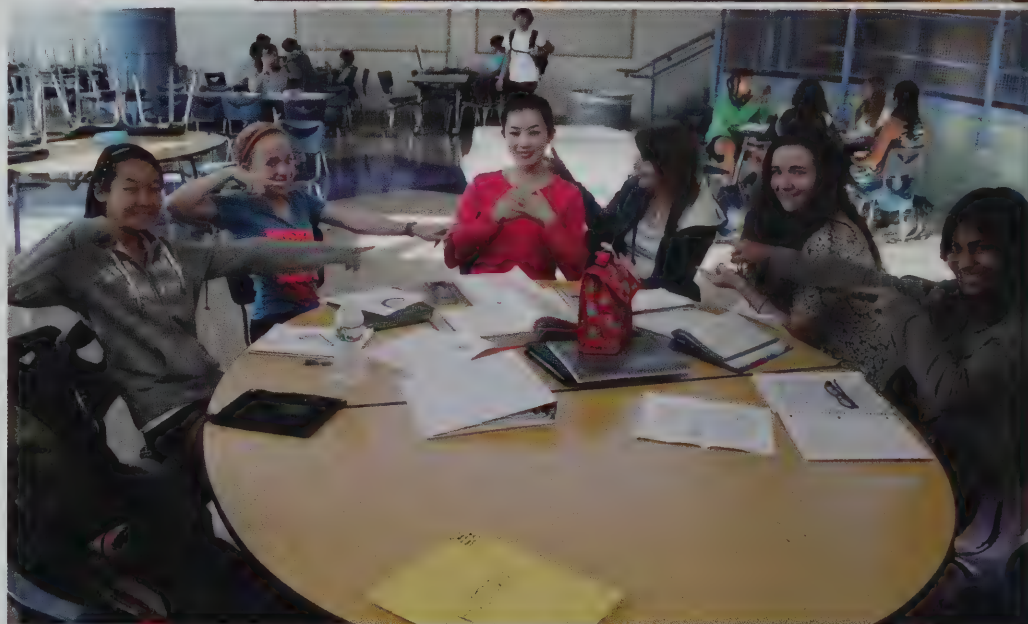

"I think E and D block are the best to have free because they are the lunch blocks."
-Kelsey Logan

"I think D block is the best block because you can get all your homework done and it's relaxing after all the classes."
-Sophie Fukara

"A block because then you can stay home and get breakfast."
-Genevieve Kyn

Rookie of the year

New freshman and sophomore English teacher Mrs. Ye says that she immediately noticed that South is a "very academic environment," and that teachers are "very driven and very concerned about the success of their students." Mrs. Ye's loves holding group discussions and enjoys the opportunity to discuss complex topics with her students. One of the most rewarding aspects of teaching, Mrs. Ye says, is watching her students grasp a concept with which they had been struggling. Mrs. Ye has already been impressed by the Newton South community and says she especially enjoyed the One School, One Book event, although she wishes she could have attended more panels.

Stop and Go

Walkers, bikers, and drivers arrived in September to find their commutes altered by a new set of traffic lights over the intersection of Parker Street and Route 9, which were installed over the summer. Students find both pros and cons with the lights; while they make it safer to cross the busy intersection, they also cause more traffic. Many are simply confused by the lights, which took over three months to install and, at the beginning of the school year, were sometimes shut off even during peak rush hour. "[The traffic light] took way too long to install and it causes more traffic," complained Jeremy Nova. Criticisms and confusion aside, though, the lights definitely help to organize a messy intersection and eliminate much of the guesswork for pedestrians trying to cross Parker Street.

Guess Who?

This year, Newton South took its security measures to the next level and issued ID cards that teachers are required to carry throughout the school. Ms. Alimenti, a math teacher, thinks that the IDs are an important measure towards ensuring the safety of students and faculty at South: "[It's risky] to leave some unlocked and some locked, because of people coming and going."

Some teachers, however, feel that the cards are unnecessary. The cards all have bar codes which grant teachers access to a lock system which is in place at many Newton elementary schools, but not at Newton South.

What's New?

New Things at South

New Rug for the Den

The new gym floor installed in the field house received mixed reactions this fall. Wellness teacher and volleyball coach Mr. Elwell said the new floor is "absolutely beautiful. It looks nice, new, and they sanded it down. It is a huge improvement."

Not everyone is a fan of the new gym floor. Some feel the the design includes too much black and orange and not enough of South's blue. A few athletes complained that the new floor's tan lines, which replaced blue ones, blend into the wood and are much more difficult to see. "I liked how [on the old floor], the mascot was in the center," commented Abigail Belozeroova.

It is also conveniently located on Needham Street, which is a popular destination for Newton South students. Juniors Rebecca Kalissa and Brenda Phat enjoy working at TJ Maxx because it is a fun job, and their co-workers are friendly and great to work with.

Senior Emily Tippet currently works at the newly opened Yogurtland right in Newton Center. After walking out of Panera one day over the summer, Emily was offered a coupon by the manager for the soon-to-be-opened store. She asked the manager if there were any available positions, applied for the job, and was soon hired. Emily enjoys working her quiet Sunday morning shift where she runs the cash register and prepares the yogurt and toppings.

Loud, off-the-wall hyper, and enthusiastic is how she would describe her class of fifth-through-eighth graders.

Without the hype leading up towards the annual junior vs. senior Powderpuff game, the pre-Thanksgiving Pep Rally felt a little empty this year. "Without powderpuff the pep rally seemed less meaningful," commented junior Mira Li.

Despite the cancellation of the game, juniors and seniors both still wore Powderpuff jerseys to school and were just as enthusiastic in cheering for their respective classes.

The senior class officers organized a few events for the Pep Rally, including an inter-grade basketball tournament. Alyssia Davis, who was on the sophomore squad, said the games were a lot of fun. The seniors ultimately beat the staff team in the final round and earned the right to shave "2014" into Principle Stembbridge's hair.

The Newtones and Dance Team also gave stellar performances at the Pep Rally. Overall, most agreed that the event was a success.

One School One Book

Every year, the One School, One Book program, an all-school event, unites students, faculty and the community through literature. At the beginning of the event, the field house fills with students, faculty, and staff to listen to the keynote speaker. The students then attend two seminars—one of which is a panel discussion on a relevant topic from the book, and the other a classroom discussion with a Newton South teacher. This year, all Newton South students read Outliers by Malcolm Gladwell—the story of success. This year's keynote speaker was Steve Siagel of Siagel Productions, and panels offered ranged from college admissions to arts and the community. Some panels were more successful than others; according to junior Michaela Nesson, "the college panel was very informative, but also pretty stressful. The process is already pretty stress-inducing for South students, so hearing about all the requirements for getting into a 'good' school was a bit overwhelming." Although some students had mixed feelings, Outliers provided common ground for all South students, allowing them to discuss important ideas and explore the concept of success.

Regulus

With two new faculty advisers – the sassy, well-dressed Mr. Lee and the wonderfully organized Ms. Vachon – and a larger staff than ever before, Regulus worked hard this year to improve our journalism and design and, as always, produce an excellent yearbook. We stayed up past mortal hours editing pages, got pizza grease on our computers, and set our standards high. This year's book involved a lot of hard work but also a lot of good times.

"Yearbook is stressful at times, but we work together," said editor-in-chief Emily Goldstein. "We're friendly and like a family," agreed Anna Alsop, also an editor-in-chief. This year's staff has worked together to a greater extent than in previous years, and each page was a team effort. A large staff of 22 students allowed the work to be more spread out. "This year we have a great theme and the book is much more cohesive than previous years. You can truly see a difference and all of the hard work everyone puts into each page," remarked Goldstein.

Editors and staff on yearbook get a special view of the school. "You get to know the school as a whole and all the clubs and extracurriculars that people do," said Alsop. From the Hockey team to the Asian Student Organization, we get in touch with every group across the school and bring them together under 232 pages. And that, ultimately, is what makes Regulus special.

Reflections Arts Magazine

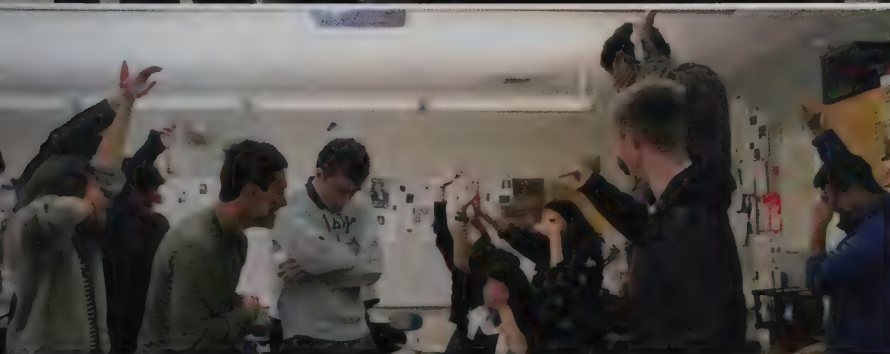

Led by Editors-in-chief Ko Takasugi-Czernowin and Sophie MacArthur, Reflections meets every Thursday to review work for the magazine, which comes out annually in the spring. During meeting, editors and staff discuss student-submitted work and vote on whether each photograph, painting, drawing, poem, story, or song should be included in the final publication.

The magazine has also focused on fundraising this year. "We ... organize house shows that we call 'Teabarns' where anyone from South can perform, read poetry, [or anything else]." This year, Teabarn attracted larger audiences than ever before, which meant more money for the magazine.

Though the publication's meetings are generally relaxed, the staff care a lot about their work. "We want to invite more people to be involved in the magazine, to be compelled to produce and share their art, and we want to put out the best magazine we can," said MacArthur.

Despite the many injuries plaguing the girls soccer team this season, they were still able to field a very solid team. "We won more games than I had expected back at the beginning of the season and really played to our potential," senior captain Sophie MacArthur said. The girls' hard work this season played off when they were able to clinch a spot in the state tournament.

Soccer Sisters

Girls Soccer

In addition to practicing and doing hard fitness, the girls enjoy spending time with one another. "Our team is really close. We make fun of each other a lot," said Sophie. However, the girls like to find a balance between working hard and having fun. "We are also competitive and hold ourselves to a high standard," Sophie added.

Elizabeth Barry dribbles up the field.

Junior Elizabeth Barry has been playing soccer since she could walk. Throughout her three years at South, she has made many great memories with her "soccer sisters" that she will never forget. She loves how close and loving her team is. "Out of all the sports teams I've played on at South, soccer has been by far the closest team. If I am ever having a bad day, my soccer sisters always cheer me up," Elizabeth said. Elizabeth looks forward to the next season and plans to play soccer in college.

Junior Ben Cooper has been playing soccer since he was eight, and has been on the South soccer team since freshman year. Ben admired the job Ryan Treviño did as captain and said, "Ryan was a good leader and showed a lot of heart, which is what the team lacked as a whole this year." Though the team did not have as good of a record as he had hoped, Ben is optimistic about next year.

The boys soccer team finished with a stronger record than last year's. According to Senior Captain Ryan Treviño, their success was credited to the talented group of guys on the squad. "It was great to play alongside the senior guys, and the younger guys really stepped up throughout the season," Ryan said.

Kickin' It

Everyone on the team was able to get a lot of playing time thanks to frequent substitutions and line-up revisions. "We were a more balanced squad and everyone played a big role on our team," said Ryan Treviño. "We had moments of great play and a couple close games that didn't go our way, but we were able to turn our luck around in our last few games. I think our team was better than our record shows."

The football team started off the season strong, with two big wins in a row. Some of the goals they set for the season included getting more wins than the previous year, getting better each and every day, and to win the Thanksgiving Day game. However, "towards the middle we were plagued by injuries, making it really tough because we had such few people," said senior captain, Ethan Meyer. Despite the injuries, senior captain Jake Alexander remains positive about the season. "We've been competitive in every game we've played so far and have been working hard in practice. Our record doesn't reflect the work we put in everyday," Jake said.

Jake also credits some of their success to the great group of guys on the team. "The team dynamic is one of the best it's been in recent years. Everyone comes together during games, and it feels like our starting core is a very cohesive unit," he said.

Despite losing 17 seniors from the squad last year, the field hockey team was able to rebound, getting many young and talented players to join the program. "My goals for the team's season were to hype up the team and get more people to be interested and join, which went really well. We had a ton of freshmen jump in, and had a lot of fans at games to support us," said Senior Captain, Melanie Gundersheim.

Flock to it Field Hockey

The young team showed lots of promise this season, coming up close in many of their games, and playing hard against good teams. Before games, the girls pumped themselves up by listening to CDs they made for team. They also enjoyed many team dinners, which brought them all closer.

"I'm so honored to have been the team captain and my life in high school wouldn't be the same without field hockey," said Melanie.

Sophie Delaney runs down the field

Sophomore Sophie Delaney has been playing field hockey for two years. Although the Newton South team did not have the best record, Sophie said that she had a lot of fun along the way. Her favorite memory from being on the team was from when they were playing Acton-Boxborough and were down 6-0. "Our coaches decided to let us have some fun and started putting us in really random positions. I always play defense and they put me as forward. It was probably the most fun I've ever had in a game." Sophie enjoys playing no matter if the team wins or loses.

Girls Volleyball

Because of their hard work and dedication, the volleyball team was able to make it to states this year. Although they didn't win it all, the team members are all very proud of each other. Sienna Jackson-Unger, one of the team captains, said, "becoming captain, I had to take on a lot of leadership responsibilities and help people with their improvement." Junior Rebecca Houston-Read believes that volleyball is an extremely enjoyable sport to play and said, "It requires teamwork, communication, and cooperation from all members of the team."

This year, the team was really close and ON, which really helped the chemistry and COMMUNICATION during matches and practices.

Boys Volleyball

Led by captains Jared Chin, Brendan Duggan, and Jonathan Lee, the boys volleyball team believes in hard work. Duggan's biggest piece of advice for volleyball newcomers? Work on the basics. "At the beginning it's hard to learn the fundamentals, but once you do it helps a lot. It's one of those sports where the fundamentals don't come easy," Duggan said. This year they hope to become a closer-knit sweater. Lee mentions the nature of the game, saying, "Freshmen, sophomores and everyone knows each other. It's a community and we have to be a team, so everyone's pretty tight." The team takes pride in past seasons and pushes members to strive and reach their season goals together.

Girls Cross Country and Track & Field

There's nothing like the pain of a tough workout to bring friends together. The Girls Cross Country and Track and Field teams are a tight-knit group of dedicated athletes. "The team is incredibly close, and everyone is so supportive of one another," said Lucrecia Aguilar, a captain for all three seasons.

With four or five captains for each of the seasons, the team isn't lacking in leadership, but they also have a lot of new talent. During the indoor season, the team sent a relay team to New Balance Nationals in New York City which included two seniors, Charlotte Huth and Aguilar, a sophomore, Rebecca Grusby, and a freshman, Clare Martin. The girls placed 12th in the country and bested South's previous record for the distance medley relay. The team will graduate a large and strong senior class this year, but has many underclassmen ready to fill their shoes.

The girls may race individually, but the team is definitely a single unit. "You still have the support of the team even if you compete in an individual race," said captain Alekhya Chaparala. Aguilar agreed: "The track community is the most amazing, supportive community I've ever been a part of. I love coming to practice everyday. The team is my second family."

Fast and Furious

After winning the spring season Dual County League championships last year, the boys entered the fall season with ambitious goals and a strong work ethic. The Cross Country team missed the championship win, but the Indoor Track and Field team ran, hurdled, jumped, and threw their way to a trophy at the end of the regular season.

The boys on the team train hard, but they also take time to form close bonds. "My goal was to build a team with genuine camaraderie that was passionate for the sport," said Track and Cross Country Captain Collin Pham, "I think I reached it."

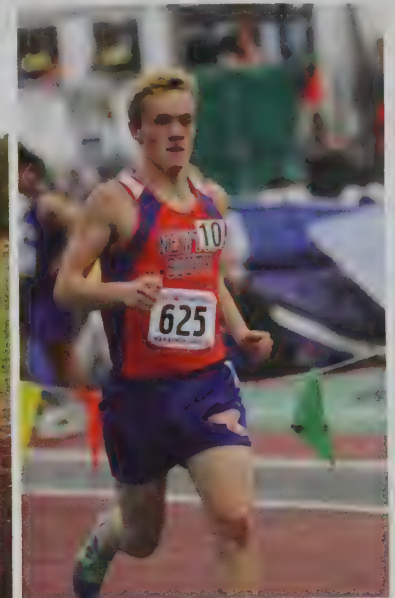

Many may think of Track and Field and Cross Country as individual sports, but the team relies on each other just as much as any other sports team. "Being able to lead a very talented and committed team is more rewarding than anything I've done," said Track Captain Nick Marino, "seeing the improvement of each runner adds to this sense of achievement I feel."

During the year, the dance team competes in the fall and winter, performs at the pep rally, football games, basketball games, and participates in Tertulia. Junior Kelsey Logan said, "I like being helpful to the underclassmen and I can't wait for competition." When they perform, junior Sammi Goodstein said that "each and every one of us brings something good to the table." By the end of the season, the team had not only grown in size, but all of its members had also become closer and stronger as a team.

DANCE Team

Captain Nicole Wantman has been on the team since she was a freshman and thinks "watching the team evolve is amazing." She also "[loves] the way dance can be done as a group, but yet it's still something you do individually." Members of the team love dancing because they also get perform with their friends.

The Captains

Captains Myanna, Keayra and Kaiyanna have been cheerleading ever since their sophomore year of high school. Keayra said she became inspired to join the cheerleading team after attending a pep rally. Myanna joined the team because she was looking for something that combined her interests in gymnastics and dance. All of the captains agreed that being with the other cheerleaders and going to competitions are their favorite parts of being on the team.

Puttin' For First Golf

This year, the golf team had a great season and was able to make it to states and come in fourth place. Max Hooker, one of the varsity captains, said, "Although we didn't win it all, we worked hard and accomplished more than we ever thought we would." Everyone on the team was competitive and got along very well with others, working hard while also having fun at the same time. Another varsity captain, Matthew Marcus, thinks golf is a sport that is very individual-oriented and said, "We have control over our own destiny out on the course."

Flipping Frenzy

Every week, the students on the wrestling team practice for their meets. Many members of the team find that wrestling is both an individual and a team sport because each member's individual performance adds up to the final score. Junior Danny Horta-Sohmer said, "Although the team is in it together, I like how there is a balance between individuality and being a team." This year, the team hopes to work as hard as it can and make it to the tournament. Since wrestling is a very physical sport, the team has to train assiduously. Sophomore Gabriel Betancourt said, "I like that it's a challenge, and it's the closest thing to fighting."

Spinning Winning

Gymnastics requires a high degree of coordination and focus, requiring athletes to master a variety of different tricks and routines. "Gymnastics is challenging and gives me such an adrenaline rush, especially the bars because everything looks super cool, and when I master a new skill, it feels amazing like I conquered something I never thought I could do," said South gymnast Sally Jenks. Although gymnastics can be incredibly difficult, the team practices allow teammates to bond over their struggles and triumphs. To foster a supportive team environment, South gymnasts assigned psych buddies to secretly cheer on their teammates before every competition.

Aiming for New Heights

After defending their recognition as an official high school sport from the Massachusetts Interscholastic Athletic Association (MIAA), the boys gymnastics team flourished. Their petition to reinstate the beloved sport in the athletic community racked over a thousand signatures, bringing a well needed spotlight to the issue at hand. Led by captains Khashayar Dashti, Vladislav Yelizarov, and Tomer Keren, the team is having one of the best seasons in years. They "have been winning a good number of meets and breaking school records too," reported by captain Khashayar Dashti. Although the team has faced many challenges throughout the years, boys gymnastics is building up the strength and teamwork to form a dynamite team in preparation for states.

Getting the Goal

This year, the girls ice hockey team has welcomed many new members. "We have a ton of new kids; it's a great opportunity for us to have a full bench, which gives the players a chance to rest," said Captain Sydney Caminetsky. The team practices every day for an hour, and has about two games per week. Caminetsky noted that the girls became very close due to the crazy practice times, and all got along very well. Although ice hockey requires many difficult techniques and practices, the girls still have fun while they are with the team. "I really like playing ice hockey because it's a good team and the people are nice," said freshman Charlotte Hankin.

Hit the Ice

Working hard together almost every day of the week, the guys on the ice hockey team have become very close friends. They have also been able to improve their skills much faster because of the constant practice. Co-captains Kevin Dober, James Donlan, Connor Kee, and Griffin Connolly share the responsibility of leading the team to victory. According to Kevin Dober, "There's no room in hockey for slacking." Many of the boys on the team agree that they enjoy having something to do everyday after school, especially since they get to be active and hang out with their friends at the same time. "My teammates are definitely my favorite part about being on the team, but the coaches are also great," Junior Paul Budge said.

Masters of the Mountain

One thing is for sure; the skiers on the Alpine Ski Team are dedicated. The team practices an hour's bus ride away at Nashoba Valley Ski Area, and they often don't get back to school until 9:30 PM.

As a result, though, the team has grown closer together both on and off the slopes. "The late nights are tough, but we make the best of it and have a lot of fun," says captain Leah Jacobson.

Unlike many South teams, the Alpine Ski Team races in the Alpha league, rather than the DCL. The team is less focused on winning, though, than making sure each racer improves from week to week. The team faced a few setbacks this year with injuries, but ultimately it was a season to remember.

The skiers on the team all share a love for the sport and the team. "I love the sport itself because you get to be outside and it's just a very fun and carefree sport," said Captain Jessica Landon, "I also love the community built around it and the friends."

Swishing through the Snow

During the winter, the cross-country ski team members work hard in order to win their competitions. Although the team likes to joke around, they are also very close and driven. The skiers do many exercises during practices to improve their skating techniques. Junior Dezso Wyner said, "My favorite part would probably be the races because they are so hard, but so satisfying to finish." Many of the skiers agree that the difficulty of cross-country skiing is also one of the most enjoyable things about the sport. Cross-country skiing allows the team to take a break from studying and take advantage of the winter snow.

Wet 'n' Wild

As much as the Swimming and Diving Team might wish it were true, there is no pool on the fourth floor. Instead, the team carpools each day to North to practice. "North can be kind of flaky sometimes with the chlorine in the pool and practice times... but it's a really nice pool. We make it work," said senior and captain Anna Garik.

Though their pool is far away, the swim team is close to each other. According to Garik, "It really is a family, like we're all best friends." Though swimming is typically thought of as a more individual sport, the swimmers make an effort to support each other as a team. "An outsider might think of it as every man for himself," said Ryan Spatz, another senior captain, "but my teammates are there to push me during practice and support me during races."

The swimmers and divers on the team are united by their dedication. "[You need] persistence and commitment, even through when you're tired and when you don't want to swim and when you're sore. You need to be okay with cold water; you need to be okay with water in general; you need to be okay with dry skin and chlorine," said Garik. The approximately thirty swimmers, who committed themselves to the pool for the whole season, certainly were willing to make these sacrifices.

Last year's team graduated a strong class, but, "we've gained a lot of really good swimmers this year," said Garik. A more prominent setback for the team this year was perhaps the new suits, which, though they had some advantageous technology, left some major aesthetic flaws. "They were all supposed to be blue, but [Scott] Perrin accidentally ordered bright orange, so we all kind of look like pumpkins," said Garik, "you know what? Whatever. We make it work."

This year's girls basketball team demonstrates a strong loving bond to both the sport and to each other. Applying communication, teamwork, and passion, the girls have fought their way through the season with nothing less than complete devotion. Captains Jessa Rubera, Shaylah Kelly, and Lauren Levey prepare for fierce competition while encouraging and supporting their teammates. "It's still a new team. We still have a lot to learn, but we're very hard working and we're very compassionate and love the sport, so it works out," said Lauren Levey

Senior Jessa Rubera has been playing basketball ever since she can remember. "I started when I was young and I played a bunch of different sports and I fell in love with this one," she said. Jessa practices every day with her team, and is a very committed and hard-working captain. She loves playing with such a strong and communal team. She enjoyed working with a great group of girls. "We play well with each other on the court and we bond off the court so we have a lot of good chemistry," Jessa said.

Having lost many seniors this season, the boys basketball team found an opportunity to step up as leaders. Both Phil Levine-Caleb and Geoffrey Gray, this season's varsity captains, expressed their confidence in the potential of their younger team members. One of the season's greatest highlights is a game at the TD Garden, a venue typically reserved for the championship game. "My favorite part about playing for South is being with the kids on the team almost everyday and working hard towards the same goal," said Geoffrey Gray.

Junior Captain Geoffrey Gray has been playing organized basketball since the age of six. Gray believes that this year's team has "a lot of guards and a lot of depth," and expects victory this season. "I believe in my teammates and our ability to succeed while overcoming youth and inexperience," he said. Having been on varsity for three years, Geoff proved his place on the court, even as an underclassman.

Boys Lacrosse

This year, the Boys Lacrosse Team is vying for a spot in the state tournament. In pursuit of that goal, the team needs "hard work, dedication, and all of the little stuff," said Captain Jake Alexander. Captain Zac Davidson, who plays defense, offered some other words of wisdom. "I think that one of the most important parts of any sport is to protect the net and keep the opponent's score low," Davidson said.

The captains all looked forward to making sure that everyone improved and enjoyed their time on the team.

Girls Lacrosse

This year, the Girls Lacrosse Team had a fresh and exciting season because they had many new members. Senior Sydney Caminetsky said, "I absolutely love the sport and love the team aspect of it." The girls also hope to make it to tournament this year, but Senior Marissa Gropman said, "winning some games, having a good time, and rebuilding for the coming years" is just as important. To play well, Junior Katie Doran said, "It takes a lot of communication, a lot of talking. We see each other's improvements and start to really click."

Baseball

It may be a young team, but South's baseball players have the skill to make up for it. "We have a lot of young guys on the team. That being said, we also have a lot of talent," said Senior Captain Dylan Russo. The young talent is both an advantage and a challenge for the team. "[One obstacle] is whether enough younger guys who haven't had as much varsity experience step up and produce," said Captain Eric Manditch.

The team is friendly, but knows how to stay focused. "We have a good mix of talent and camaraderie that should make us competitive," said Manditch. This year, the team focused on improving their consistency and staying strong on both offense and defense.

The boys on the team love their sport. "I like that it's a team sport where everyone contributes," said Russo. They appreciate the challenge baseball offers to both mind and body. As Manditch said, "It's a mental and physical battle when you're out on the field."

The South Softball Team looked to "hit off" the season with a bang. In the off-season, the girls trained hard, playing on various summer teams and attending hitting clinics. They hoped their hard work will pay off this season. "My goal is to not only qualify for the state tournament, but to go further than we did last year. We have worked so hard, and I'm confident that we'll have a successful season," said Captain Minh-An Quinn. According to Captain Kylie Walters, "You really get back from softball what you put into it. From hitting clinics to fielding skills, softball really is a game that requires a diverse set of skills. The only way to improve these is by actually practicing and forming muscle memory." The girls hoped to bring these skills to the plate for another unforgettable season.

Chasing my ace

The girl's tennis team was "hardworking, dedicated, hilarious, determined, competitive, outgoing, intelligent, and caring," said the team's captain, Lulu Wan. This year's team was made up of girls ranging from freshman to juniors. At the beginning of the year, the team's goal was to get more victories as well as to show off their new skills against their opponents. When asked to describe their team in one word, junior Leena Chacrone said, "it is insane but in the best way." The team this year was full of hard working, dedicated, inspired women. The team especially enjoyed bonding over their love for the sport and together they worked to become a better team.

Boys Tennis

The Boys Tennis Team had a lot to look forward to this season, with a new website for easier communication, new uniforms, and a new and smaller team. Captain Ethan Kestenber praised the tennis coaches who helped the team keep its eyes on the prize. "Our coaches are full of enthusiasm for the game, are always looking for improvement, and always see the potential in each of us," he said.

The tennis team provided players with a valuable break from the daily stresses of high school. "I like that tennis is a therapeutic game. It's fun, motivating to play well, as well as gets mind off school and other distractions," said Kestenber.

"I am looking forward to improving, cheering on, AND winning MATCHES!"

Math Department

Questions for the Department head: Mr. Rattendi

Q: How long have you been Math Department Head?

A: I started teaching in September of 2000, and I became Department Chair in September of 2003, so ten years.

Q: What has changed over the years?

A: I think the biggest change in the department itself is the faculty. There were a lot of retirees over those years, so there are a lot of new people in the department... We have no new teachers this year, but last year we had three new teachers. There are no big changes in the courses this year- no new courses, no new textbooks. This is a boring year!

Q: What's new in math department this year?

A: One of the things I like is that I think we are trying as a department to do more problem solving with students, to get students to think more, and not just do standard routine problems. I think that is something that is both new and exciting at the same time, and I think the more we can get kids to think more creatively and to problem solve more creatively, the better math students and the better people they will be.

Liana Butchard, Senior

Q: What math class are you taking this year? Who is your teacher?

A: [I am taking] Math 614 with Mr. Palilunas.

Q: Has anything interesting happened in your class?

A: I don't know. That's a pretty basic class.

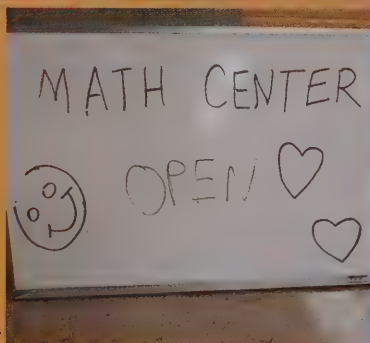

Jeremy Maltz, Sophomore

Q: What math class are you taking this year and who is your teacher?

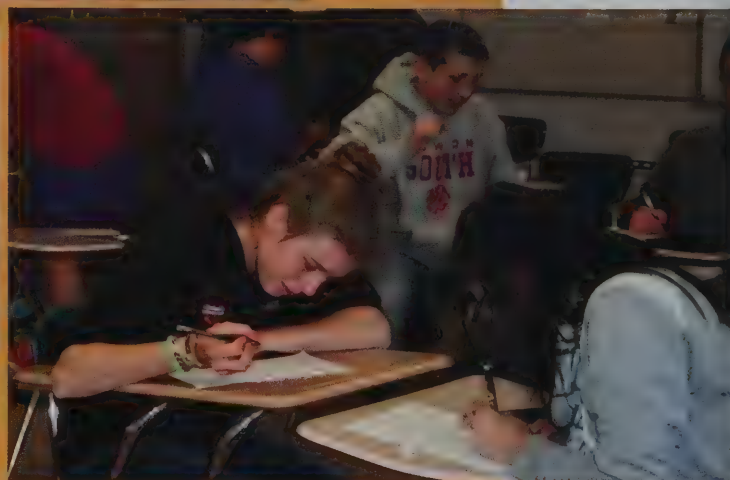

A: [I am taking] advanced math with Ms. Macadino.

Q: Are you going to take any math classes next year?

A: Yes, I am planning on taking math next year. I will probably still be in advanced, so junior advanced math.

Photographs by Noa Shneerson and Raina L.

Below: Senior Hans Hysenaj poses in the astronomy room.

Q: How long have you been department head?

A: This is my second year in Newton South as the department chair in science.

Q: What has changed over the years?

A: We've been changing the way we're doing the Science Help Center, and trying to make sure we are making it into a place where students can get support in science, rather than a hangout.

Q: What's your favorite South tradition in the department?

A: Last year we started the Science Open House, and I would look to continue that this year, where we can highlight student work.

Q: What's new in the department?

A: Well, I'm new in the department, we also have two new staff members this year, Dr. Silverman, Mr. Normandin and Mr. Burt have joined our department as well, so we're very happy to have the new staff members!

Science Department

Questions for the Department Head: Mr. Gagnon

Offering classes ranging from Physics and Technology to Marine Biology the Science department caters to all of its students' interests and supports their learning with computer labs, resources, and the Science Learning Instructional Center (SLIC for short) where there is tutoring available for students who are struggling.

Courtney Chang, Freshman

Q: What class do you take and who is the teacher?

A: I take Intro to Physics, and Mr. Normandin is my teacher.

Q: What is your favorite memory or experience in the department?

A: I don't have one yet.

Q: What is special about this course?

A: It's really challenging ...he's giving us problems sets already.

Photographs by Noa Shneorson and Emily Goldstein

Patrick Torres, Senior

Q: What class do you take in the Science Department and who is your teacher?

A: Conservation Biology and Environmental Studies. I have Mrs. Bhattacharya.

Q: What is your favorite memory or experience in the department?

A: I really liked tie-dying in sophomore chemistry in Mrs. Drurey's class. It was fun!

Q: What is special about the course Conservation?

A: It teaches what is wrong with our environment, and what we can do as citizens to correct that.

Questions for the Department Head: Mr. Baron

Q: How long have you been the Department Head?

A: This is my sixth year.

Q: What has changed over the years in this department?

A: We've hired three new people, so that's what had changed. We've been working over the years at becoming more collaborative, working together, and being more consistent as the curriculum develops. So there are things that we've been working on, but it's basically the same cast of characters and we're just trying to do what we can to do a better job.

Q: What's your favorite department tradition?

A: Well I don't know if this is my favorite or not,...but at the start to every department meeting, we bring a poem and read the poem out loud, talk about the poem for just like five minutes at the start of every department meeting...We just brought it back this year and I think people really like it.

Q: What's new this year in this department?

A: Well, the newest thing this year is that we have three new teachers who are all young and energetic and much better dressed than the rest of us.

Questions for the Department Head: Ms. Morrill

Q: How long have you been History Department Head?

A: I'm starting my third year, so I have been here for two full years.

Q: What is your favorite South tradition in the History department?

A: The history department is usually quite a large presence in the Faculty Variety Show. We have number of people who are talented singers, musicians, and actors. The event showcases the wide variety of talent in the History Department!

Q: What's new in the department this year?

A: We've had wonderful teachers join our department over the course of the last 2 years; they have brought a wealth of ideas and experience. Currently, we are running a new course in Ethics and more multi-level courses, especially in senior year. One of the strengths of the History Department is that there is a great deal of creativity that has resulted in a variety of different ways to work with kids, such as the Global program, linked classes, and SAM classes.

History Department

The History Department presents its students with a spectacular variety and range of classes in content and level. The incredibly knowledgeable and friendly faculty guides students through History and Social Sciences using simulations, videos, textbooks, and elaborate projects, pushing students to see how history impacts the past, present, and future.

Jennifer Han, Junior

Q: What class do you take?

A: I take is Junior global history with Mr. Thompson.

Q: What's your favorite thing about it?

A: I like how our class does current events...It helps me understand what is going on in the world and puts domestic issues into context.

Q: What's special about the course?

A: We learn crucial issues and events in American history and the basic workings of the U.S government and how it's been shaped.

Questions for the Department Head: Ms. Murphy-Ferguson

Q: How long have you been department head?

A: I've been department chair for 8 years now.

Q: What has changed over the years in the department?

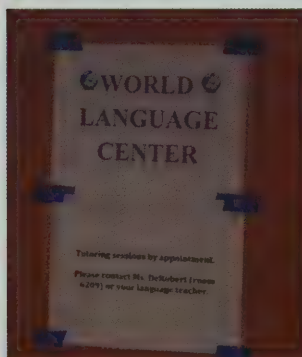

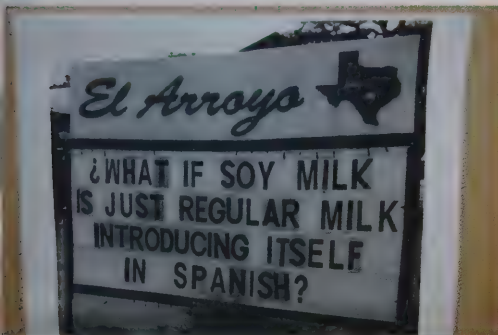

A: During that time, we've seen changes in terms of student travel...Ms. Maher and Ms. Wiener developed a language/culture/service trip to Peru, where students live with a family, take language and cultural classes, and spend afternoons volunteering with children in an orphanage. They also visit Machu Picchu and the Sacred Valley. We relaunched a family homestay travel program to France. This year we will be participating in a small exchange with a school in Paris. Last year, for the first time we partnered with Newton North in our travel program to Nicaragua. We participate in the Newton/Beijing exchange, and we've seen our class sizes grow significantly in Chinese...since I arrived.

Q: What is your favorite South tradition in the Language department?

A: Each year, 2 teachers from the whole district have the opportunity to travel with the exchange, and I'm happy to say that at least six South teachers have traveled in the past five years!

Q: What's new this year?

A: ASL was introduced to the department 3 years ago...New technology has definitely played an increasing role in our curriculum allowing classes to connect much more easily with other people and other cultures...Our language lab allows students to interact with one another as they talk about video and audio material they access on the web. In the past two years, we've developed a fairly extensive network of peer tutors, which has been a great resource to students seeking a little extra support.

Above: The World Language Center is a resource for students outside of the classroom. Peer tutors and teachers meet students and go through vocabulary and grammar using the textbooks available.

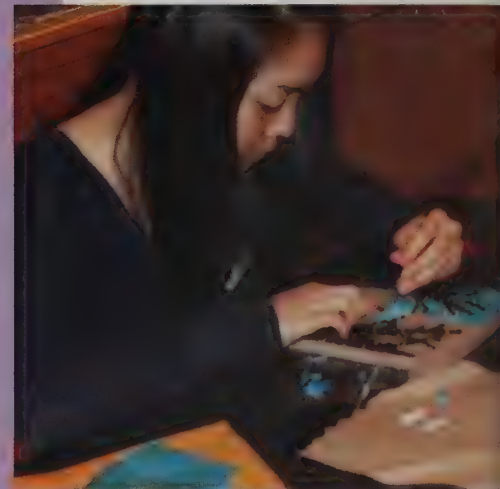

Mixing it up in Mixed Media

Mixed Media, taught by Mr. Wixon, is not only a relaxed class with a non-stressful environment, but a welcoming community where many students often enjoy lunch and socialize. Emily Palmer enjoys taking Mixed Media because "[Mr. Wixon] allows [the class] to have freedom." Only having one project per term, students can take the time to unwind, while allowing themselves to create art. The art projects that Mixed Media students can do range from mosaics, to 3-D buildings, to enameling, and to creating a set from a story. Mosaics and enameling deals with glass, while the 3-D buildings deal with cardboard. Students use any material they wish to create projects that reflects the meaning of Mixed Media—transforming a variety of materials into art.

Throwing Clay Ceramics

Many students who take Ceramics would agree with Michelle Tian that "having the freedom to choose what to make," makes the Ceramics classes wonderful. Ceramics, another flexible art class with a term-long project, is a great outlet for creativity, as Simon Weiler attests, "clay is a type of material that doesn't have many physical boundaries so you can be very creative." Students who take Ceramics are grateful for the laid-back environment and enjoy the break from stressful and constant school work.

Capturing Memories Photography

In photography classes, students learn photography techniques from basic skills such as composition, to more complex skills such as alternative processes. Photography 1 starts with students learning the basics of expressing themselves. Freshman photo student Lily Borak spoke about the photographic process, "first you have to take pictures. Then you proceed to develop said pictures via chemicals, and then you take your film after you dry it, and make contact sheets, you then enlarge some photos that Mr. B. chooses and you print them." Students have many reasons they keep coming back to photo. Jacob Schwartz described photo as "endless possibilities for personal expression," and Kalina Wang said she "likes the environment, how it's relaxed, and how you can just hang out."

The Art of Creativity Studio Art

Studio Art presents another great opportunity for students to express themselves. Each term, students work with a theme that they will portray through all of their projects. Isabel Silverston spoke to this: "though a series of mini projects, we are able to explore all different parts of the theme, explore different materials, and explore different takes and different structures of the central theme." This year, for term one, the theme was a still-life of a sculpture of bicycles as displayed in the studio. Students worked with all different materials, such as watercolor or charcoal, pastel, and pencil. Then, students picked their favorite material to create their masterpiece.

Illustrator Graphic Design

Newton South's Graphic Design course offers students the opportunity to use design software as well as manual skills to create multi-color designs on paper, t-shirts, posters, and bumper stickers. Renee Trask liked the class because "Mr. Briggs makes it fun, and the screen printing is so interesting." Many students are fond of the class because it offers much freedom to work on their own projects. And, additionally, it introduces a new form of art to students, as Junior Sabrina Montana says, "the class introduced a different form of art that intrigued me."

Web Wizards Web Design

The Web Design course here at South teaches students how to create their own website. Jaime Arechalde said she signed up for the class because "the idea of making a website was cool to me." Students in the Web Design class learn to code and program so that they can create their own websites. David Fang explained what the class offers for him saying, "the class allows a lot of room for creativity and I always learn something new every class." Although the websites created in the class are not published to the Internet, students learn techniques that strengthen their computer skills.

The Cauldron Cooking

Andrew Cheung and Matthew Lu wait to fry their food.

Cooking courses at Newton South are not only informational; they are fun. Students in cooking classes normally meet twice a week for a semester; one class is a "learning day" and the second is a "cooking day." Serena Allegro, who takes Healthy Cooking, Healthy Eating expressed what she likes about the cooking class. She said, "I like to learn about the different pieces that create a healthy diet and how all food can be healthy and delicious." Furthermore, cooking classes allow students to enjoy the process of cooking and to taste their own creations. Additionally, many of the cooking classes introduce students to different foods from around the world. But most importantly, students gain the knowledge that anything can be created from simple ingredients.

Nico Teneiro and Ali Nislick prepare their ingredients together.

Little People Preschool

A preschooler dressed as Yoda for Halloween.

Newton South students have the opportunity to work with preschoolers as part of an incredible and growing Early Childhood Education curriculum. Alexis Kieran enjoys working with the preschoolers because she likes "getting to play with the kids, as it's a nice break from school." Taking an Early Childhood Education course proves its benefits, as students are able to take a break from their hectic schedules to play with children during their free blocks. Bella Ehrlich, another student who takes the course, hopes to "[get] to know all of the kids individually." Although there are many students here at South who have not taken the course, high school students are always delighted to see preschoolers walking in the halls—especially in the Annual Halloween Parade in which the preschoolers show-off their Halloween costumes and trick-or-treat at the house offices.

Preschoolers made their own Halloween bags.

Spring Awakening

This year, the fall season musical by South Stage was a production of Spring Awakening, an edgy Broadway rock musical. Set in the 1890s, the show centers around teenage life. Only the second high school in the country to perform the show, South Stage took on the task of dealing with teenage issues such as sexuality, suicide, abortion, domestic abuse, and molestation. The actors had to face the challenging roles in order to bring the show to life. Although the play was controversial due to its mature content, one of the actors, Jonah Cochin, said "the response was truly indescribable." He notes that Spring Awakening has a message that is "so relevant to our community and to every teenager." Putting together such a powerful and moving play was a group effort, and the actors bonded over the performance.

Frosh Play

Frosh Play allows freshmen to explore the world of theater. "I thought that doing a play where I don't have to worry about auditioning would be a nice stepping stone to more South Stage productions, as well as a nice introduction to how south stage works," said freshman Deana Korsunsky. Frosh Play is also a way for actors to be adventurous without the added stress of auditions and competition, because everyone gets a part. The Frosh Play also helps create a tight-knit freshman theater environment. Matthew King said, "being in a cast of great people and spending way too much time with them is great and fun way to bond." Participating in the Frosh Play gives students the opportunity to explore their options in the South Stage program and get a feel for what kinds of productions they would like to pursue in the future.

Tartuffe

Fall Play

This year's fall play, Tartuffe, was a comedy set in France in the 1600s. The play takes its title from the main character, Tartuffe, a homeless man who is taken in by a generous family. Tartuffe is revealed to be a fraud, who tries to steal the family's wealth.

Complex and entertaining, Tartuffe was a huge success; tickets were sold out, and dozens of names were on the wait list. The actors themselves found the experience just as fulfilling as their audience. According to Acia Gankin, who starred in the play, "acting is a vital part of my life because it makes me happy and telling the stories of other people adds purpose to my life."

Into the Woods

Into the Woods by Stephen Sondheim combines a few of the Brother Grimm stories into a cohesive musical while adding a story of its own. The show tells the story of a baker, who is cursed after his father steals from a witch; he and his wife cannot bear children. The baker and his wife go to the witch, begging her to end the curse. She instructs them to go "into the woods" on a wild scavenger hunt to obtain various objects such as a white cow and golden hair. On their adventure in the woods, the baker and his wife encounter many fairy tale characters, including Rapunzel, Little Red Riding Hood, Jack from Jack and the Beanstalk, and Cinderella.

The play was playful and enjoyable. Many students felt that they were able to grow and were challenged as actors in the show. According to Sophomore Emily Snider, "the energy was really amazing and everyone was just at the top of their game." Although the preparation and countless rehearsals were difficult, the students were able to pull together a fantastic show for the school to enjoy.

String Theory Orchestra

Newton South's Orchestra is home to the school's most dedicated string instrument players. The group meets every B block and spends each rehearsal working to improve the group's tone, dynamics, and rhythm. "I think our goals are to work together and make sure that as a group we are continually improving and learning new techniques," said junior Julia Churchill.

Players, though, make sure to keep rehearsals fun and encouraging. "I like orchestra because it's open to any musician who wants to play. Even though there are people of different levels in this group, we all work hard as an ensemble to sound our best," said Julia. The group includes members from all four grades and a variety of skill levels, and its members appreciate the group's welcoming atmosphere.

The orchestra plays about five concerts a year, from formal occasions in the Seasholes auditorium to the more fun, relaxed Pops concert at the end of the year. Under the direction of music teacher Adam Grossman, the group is always well-prepared for every performance.

Musicians in the group all agree that the rewards of playing in the orchestra are worth the practice hours. "It's always challenging," said Julia, "but it's also fun."

Symphonic Band

The Symphonic Band is South's largest musical group. Over 70 musicians meet every B Block to work on improving the group's sound. The band performs concerts roughly every two months and travels to Lexington for the MICCA festival every spring.

"[The band's members] are all smart and focused, which lets us get work done while still having a good time," says trumpet player Daniel Morris. Indeed, the four-block commitment ensures that all the band's musicians are there because they want to be.

The band welcomes players of all skill levels, and Ms. Linde, the band's director, helps younger players grow into experienced musicians during their four years. This year, the band focused especially on tuning while playing a wide variety of music.

Select Wind Ensemble

Wind ensemble members might be among the most courageous students at South; they brave both late nights and early mornings to practice late Monday nights and before school on Wednesdays. The group, comprised of about twenty musicians from the Symphonic Band, offers a smaller environment and an opportunity for its members to dive into the details of their music. "I love playing...in wind ensemble because you're playing with a group of people who not only love their instruments and are passionate about it, but who practice hard, and we're able to play more difficult pieces of music," Feli Kuperwasser said. Members agree that the ensemble's small numbers and high skill level make the early mornings well worth it.

Jazz

Jazz Ensemble, Lab Jazz, Combos

Things run a little more loosely in South's jazz groups. Tempos ebb and flow, eight notes swing, and players sometimes improvise their parts. That being said, the groups – Lab Jazz, Jazz Ensemble, and two Combo groups – work incredibly hard to prepare for performances; some of the groups practice after school. The bands perform for concerts and also travel to the Berklee Jazz Festival every year. Jazz musicians, many of whom play in multiple groups, enjoy the fun, energetic atmosphere of the style. "I enjoy the music. It's fun to play," said junior Sam Blumensteil. Sam plays the trumpet and said that he likes jazz music because it's "upbeat [and] energetic... It's music you can feel or dance to."

Newton South Chorale

Newton South Chorale offers an intensive but enjoyable environment for sophomores, juniors, and seniors passionate about singing to improve their technique. Already well versed in the the basics, the group works to learn sight reading and covers more advanced material. Students in the chorale love the many classes and rehearsals, finding that they get as much out of singing as they put into it. "I love singing because it's a form of expression and allows me to let loose. I started singing when I was four and kept singing because it makes me feel confident," junior Ellie Yorke said.

Madrigals

Beneath the long black robes and formal tuxedos, the Madrigals, South's top level chorus, actually love to joke around. During a typical rehearsal, "half the time it'll be us laughing, and the other half it'll be us singing," said senior Michael Costello, "we have to get stuff done. We get it done, but we have fun doing it."

The Madrigals faced some challenges at the beginning of the year when, after graduating a strong senior class, the group was left with only three male voices. "We all have to pull our weight especially hard," said Michael. The group conquered these hurdles, though, and spends every B block working to improve their community sound. At its core, Madrigals is a group of students who simply love to sing. As Michael said, "it's a musical instrument you don't have to carry around."

Vocal Ensemble

Freshmen can immediately get involved in the South music scene by joining the Vocal Ensemble, a chorus group exclusively for ninth graders. The freshman chorus sets the tone for students' high school singing careers, covering everything from classical, to jazz, to popular music. According to freshman Sarah Levine, who also sings for the Newtones, "I love the sense of community and friendship and how all of our voices sound combined together as a group."

Harambee Gospel Choir

South's Harambee choir loves to get loud. "It's a lively group," said senior Shaylah Foley, "it's never really quiet." The group sings mostly gospel music, and they have a fun time doing so. "It's just a fun environment," said Shaylah.

The choir prides itself on its accepting atmosphere. "Anybody can sing," said junior Janelle Watty, "more people should join." Gospel singing does require a certain amount of energy, though, as well as an open mind. "You need to believe in what you're singing," said Shaylah, "Gospel's about what you're feeling." "It's a different sense of style," added Janelle.

In the end, the group's diverse community is a huge plus for many of its members. The choir draws singers from many different social and ethnic groups. "It's not just for black people," Shaylah said, "White people should join too."

What would you tell YOUR 16-YEAR-OLD SELF?

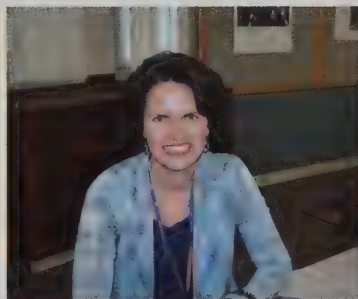

Alan Crosby

"I would probably tell myself that 'Yes, it really will turn out okay.'"

"I would tell my 16 year old self to be really nice to that guy because you're gonna marry him."

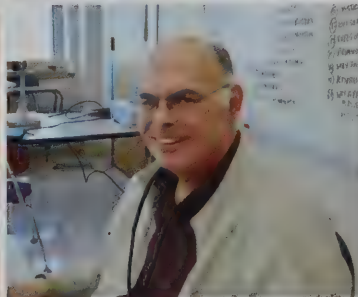

Karen Sobin-Jonash
